Studies have shown that, for women at average risk, the removal of the other healthy breast does not improve survival. Its probability of developing cancer in the other breast is about 1% or less per year. Talk to your doctors about what's best for your specific situation. To make an informed decision about your treatment, it is important to know your actual risk of breast cancer coming back (recurrence) or to develop a new cancer. For a simple mastectomy (also called total mastectomy), the surgeon removes all breast skin of the chest and the areola (the dark area around the nipple) usually the surgeon will also perform a dissection of sentinel lymph node, which means that 1-3 lymph nodes under the arm on the lateral of the tumor will be removed to verify if the cancer spread there. Sentinel lymph nodes are the first lymph nodes to which cancer can spread. A procedure called lymphatic mapping is performed the day before, in the morning or during surgery to help the surgeon locate the sentinel nodes. This involves the injection of a radioactive liquid, a blue dye or both, under the nipple or near the tumor site. An axillary dissection of lymph node, which means that more than five lymph nodes (usually about 10) under the arm on the side of the tumor will be removed to verify if the cancer spread there. During a nipple-sparing mastectomy, the entire breast tissue is removed, but the nipple, areola and breast skin are left intact. Lymph nodes are also usually removed to verify that the cancer has spread beyond the breast (unless mastectomy is prophylactic). A dissection of sentinel lymph node or a lymph lymph node dissection will be done depending on your specific diagnosis. Also, some tissue from beneath the nipple and areola is removed to check for cancer cells there. If cancer is found in that location, the nipple and usually the areola will need to be removed. This is usually done later on, in a separate procedure. Another reason the nipple may need to be removed in a separate procedure is if it does not have a good enough blood supply and develops necrosis (tissue breakdown). In most cases, the breasts are immediately reconstructed during a nipple-sparing mastectomy, with either tissue expanders, breast implants, or tissue flaps. If the nipples need to be removed, they can be reconstructed at a later point with nipple reconstruction surgery, nipple tattoos, or both. Nipple-sparing mastectomy with immediate reconstruction has become popular because it tends to provide good, natural looking cosmetic results with minimal scarring. If you get a nipple-sparing mastectomy, though, you should@A expect much (or any) sensation in the nipples after the surgery. Also, your nipples may appear to be erect all the time after this surgery. @ Á You may not be a candidate for nipple-sparing mastectomy if you have a tumor close to or involving the nipple or areola. Also, the procedure is not recommended for people with inflammatory breast cancer. Being a smoker, having scarring around the nipples from prior surgeries, or having had radiation to the breast in the past can make you less likely to have a good enough blood supply in the breast skin and nipples to get a good result from nipple-sparing mastectomy. In some cases, having large and drooping breasts can make it more difficult to get a good cosmetic result from a nipple-sparing mastectomy. There is a risk, for example, that the nipples won@Át be in the correct position. Your surgical team may recommend that you have a series of procedures in this situation.
