Second Class Citizen First edition (UK)AuthorBuchi EmechetaCountryNigeriaLanguageEnglishGenreNovelPublisherAllison & BusbyPublication date1974Pages174 pp.ISBN978-0-8076-1128-9Preceded byIn the Ditch Followed byThe Bride Price Second Class Citizen is a 1974 novel by Nigerian writer Buchi Emecheta, first published in London by Allison and Busby. It was subsequently published in the US by George Braziller in 1975. A poignant story of a resourceful Nigerian woman who overcomes strict tribal domination of women and countless setbacks to achieve an independent life for herself and her children, the novel is often described as semi-autobiographical, with the journey from Nigeria to London following closely Emecheta's own trajectory as an author.[1] Plot summary At the beginning of the novel, Adah is a child of an Ibo from Ibadu, Nigeria, living in Lagos. She dreams as a young girl of moving to the United Kingdom. After her father dies, Adah is sent to live with her uncle's family. She is able to stay in school in Nigeria and attains employment working for the British embassy as a library clerk. The compensation from this job is enough to make her a desirable bride to Francis (her now husband) and in-laws. Francis travels to the United Kingdom for several years to pursue the study of law. Adah convinces her husband's family that she and the children also belong in the UK. Francis believes they are second-class citizens in the United Kingdom as they are not citizens of the country. Adah finds employment working for another library and pays for their expenses, while also providing primary care for their children. Later, we see Francis become increasingly abusive and dismissive of Adah as she pursues becoming a writer. Critical reception Second Class Citizen is well regarded as a story of overcoming struggle and of contemporary African life.[2] On the novel's publication, Hermione Harris wrote in Race & Class: "Of the scores of books about race and black communities in Britain that have appeared during the 1960s and early 1970s, the great majority are written by white academic ultimately concerned with the relationship between white society and black 'immigrants'. Few accounts have emerged from those on the receiving end of British racism or liberalism of their own black experience. On the specific situation of black women there is almost nothing. Second Class Citizen ... is therefore something of a revelation."[3] Determination ^ Umeh, Marie. "Buchi Emecheta". Via Sage Journals Retrieved from " Author Buchi Emecheta Second Class Citizen is a very auto-biographical account of Buchi Emecheta's emigration from Nigeria to London. It's a personal story, one that candidly depicts the challenges of living with a difficult and unfaithful spouse, of being a young mother with little money, of the added challenge of "polite" racism that forced her to live beneath her previous standards, and even her own trivial concerns, such as not being properly dressed in the hospital after nearly dying during childbirth. One wants to reach through the pages and shake this obviously intelligent woman and make her stand up on her own. Her upbringing in Africa has taught her that women are second class and do not matter as much as their husbands, they are only to take care of the home and have as many children as possible. Thankfully, after living in London for years, she unlearns those childhood "lessons." You can hear this woman's voice as you read and know she is a person you could easily befriend and always be entertained by; she almost always finds the positive in the negative (and she's got plenty of negatives!). Dr. Emecheta is an author who has been an inspiration to me; not only was she living in a foreign country raising five children and acting as the sole support for her family, but she still managed to have a career and write prolifically. Where she had the time is anyone's guess. 174 Pages ISBN 9780807610664 Knee braces are versatile in the sense that the unloading effect occurs immediately upon donning the brace and they can be worn during almost any weight-bearing activity.
